Which life and love decisions promise lasting happiness?

One morning, Toni doesn't wake up as usual in her small apartment in an old building next to her long-term boyfriend. No: To her amazement, she finds herself in a generously proportioned residence. Everything is bright, tidy and expensively furnished. And the view from the window? Strangely familiar. Antonia finds that she is back in the village of her childhood.

Little by little, she realises that she is leading a quiet life here, with a car parked in front, a mother-in-law next door and a child on her lap. A child on her lap? Antonia is amazed. Is that her baby? And the father? Apparently her first great love – a man she could never quite forget.

»Reading Anne Sauer is like watching Netflix: captivating and addictive!« Ruth-Maria Thomas

A cathartic literary tale of an earth-shattering betrayal

Tassilo, young and in love with music and men, wants to get out of his prefabricated concrete apartment in Rostock and into the freedom of West Berlin. Swinging between despair and euphoria, he plans his escape – especially since he no longer feels safe at home. 'Mother says she will do everything to make sure that my plan never succeeds. Her declaration of war is crystal clear – not only as a mother, but also as a comrade.'

When this faltering, inquisitive young man with blue eyes arrives at Zoo Station in 1986, at the age of just nineteen, it feels like a miracle. Three years later, the wall comes down, and Tassilo makes a discovery that changes his whole life. Using letters, diary entries, childhood memories and Stasi files, Victor Schefé has created a novel that sparkles with energy.

Coming to terms with life – just the way it is. A woman strolls through 1980s East Berlin after work because she doesn't want to be the first home. In Moscow, a writer, tasked with writing a portrait of the prima ballerina Galina Ulanova, waits for days for a meeting before suddenly, the unexpected happens. A baby takes its first breath; a grandmother takes her last. And a middle-aged woman tries to come to terms with a cancer diagnosis. Stories of longing and wanderlust, of dictatorship and inner freedom, of being and remaining human.

Literary essay meets satire – in unmistakable Goldt style

»His works are the most humorous that German literature has to offer ... it is not accidental that anyone reading his perfect syntax will often be reminded of Thomas Mann ... Both create humour out of self-important mannerisms, out of ironic over-exaggeration of the linguistic material. But Goldt brings this material face-to-face with something entirely different: media psychobabble, and every register of vernacular and slang.« - Daniel Kehlmann.

'But?' contains a wide variety of pieces, including essay, critique, short play and aphoristic note, all showcasing the author's quintessential style and unique status in the literary world.

Chekhov's 'Cherry Orchard' for the 20th century

After coping with the tightrope act of marriage for decades, Antonia and her companions are waiting for the death of her terminally ill husband. Months pass, but the white villa in Ruppertshain in the Taunus region seems to hang in an enchanted stasis. Everyone's shock is even greater when the expected finally happens, and it's revealed that the house and garden are saddled with enormous debts.

A timeless social novel that first appeared in 1985. A classic in the tradition of Anton Chekhov, Theodor Fontane and Thomas Mann.

Gambling and Love

From the moment she met him, he's dominated her life. Now she must come to terms with the fact that he's disappeared from the scene. Bonaparte, her lover – and a notorious gambler – is apparently gone for good. Doggedly, she reflects on their love, and the things that connected her to him. As she photographs East German landscapes, she recalls their time together. Did their love story come to an end along with their casino visits?

A new edition of this early romance novel by Julia Schoch. Following the great success of 'Couple of the Century', it is time to take a second look at this love story 'with sentences like works of art' (rbb) – told in clear, brilliant, dancing style.

»This portrait thrives on the moods that Schoch creates in her calm but nuanced language, with meticulous attention to every last detail of the central theme.« Süddeutsche Zeitung

There's no path that doesn't lead home sooner or later

Amid the turmoil of the end of the Second World War, a young boy is found in the middle of Germany. He doesn't seem to remember where he came from or anything else about himself, so he is given the name Hartmut, and an estimated age, and grows up in a Catholic children's home ruled by strict order and punishments.

During his time in the children's home, he meets a slightly older girl named Margret, a war orphan, who does her best to protect him. The two become a lifeline for each other, and decide to never let each other go. Wise, sensitive and touching, Susanne Abel tells the story of a lifelong love between two children trying with all their might to forget their traumatic past.

A young woman, an African-American GI and the secret of a forbidden love

The well-known Cologne news anchor Tom Monderath is worried about his 84-year-old mother Greta, who is growing increasingly forgetful. What was initially an annoyance in his seemingly perfect life becomes an unexpected gift. Greta tells the story of her life, bit by bit - of her childhood in East Prussia, her escape from the Russian soldiers during an icy winter, her longing for her missing father, and her success in Heidelberg's black market. However, when Tom comes across a photo of a little girl with dark skin, Greta falls silent. For the first time, Tom begins to grapple more deeply with his mother's past. Not just to finally understand her sadness – his own happiness depends on it, too.

The story of Tom and Gretchen continues...

Tom Monderath is newly in love. He is having the happiest time of his life with Jenny and her little baby boy, Carl. That is until by accident, he comes across Henk, his elder half-brother, who wants to know everything about their mutual father. However, Konrad died a long time ago, and Tom's mother Greta is suffering from dementia. When more and more half-siblings come forward, it is too much for Tom. Jenny and Henk are not daunted, though, and are following the traces of Konrad's life, thereby unearthing a terrible secret. A shadow from the Third Reich that has been looming over Tom's family ever since...

Care workers on strike, retirement homes closed – who's dreaming of a peaceful Christmas ?!

Just a few days before Christmas, someone rings Annett's doorbell and drops off a 93-year-old gentleman, Mr. Jankowski. They've never met before - and yet, Annett's family is expected to take care of him. That has to be a mistake, hasn't it?

However, the government's emergency directive has decreed that complete strangers must take care of the elderly as care workers are on strike and every retirement home is forced to close.

After the first shock, Annett actually wants to help, but having this new house guest quickly overtaxes the whole family. It soon becomes clear: Mr. Jankowski cannot stay. But where can he go?

A castle in the forest, and two sisters who couldn't have less in common. When half-sisters Isa and Bella meet for the first time, it's at the reading of their father's will - and to say they're surprised would be an understatement. Not only do they have the same name, they're now forced to share their inheritance, a castle. And not just with each other – their irritable great-aunt has lifelong right of residence. Together with Isa's teenage daughter and a rather charming gardener, they find themselves in a very peculiar household indeed, navigating many a professional and romantic setback.

Thorsten Schleif: Killing Red Jack – A True Crime Thriller

- ▮ This gripping thriller offers a whole new perspective on the most famous serial killer in history: Jack the Ripper
- ▮ First in a series of historical thrillers inspired by true crimes
- ▮ For readers of Niklas Natt och Dag and Kerri Maniscalco

Who was behind the most famous series of murders of all time? And why did it come to an end so abruptly? Mary Jane Kelly was the sixth and final victim in the gruesome series of murders that gripped London in 1888 and is inextricably linked to one name: Jack the Ripper, the first serial killer in history to be reported in the press worldwide. But why did the 'Devil of Whitechapel' end his grisly work so abruptly after this murder? Did he leave Victorian England, did he choose suicide or was there something else behind it? Was 'Red Jack' himself the victim of a crime? After intensive research, judge and crime writer Thorsten Schleif presents his very own theory – with strict consideration of the evidence, told as a gripping thriller and with a surprising conclusion.

As if Franz Eberhofer didn't have enough to deal with. Now that his wife is the new mayor, she's throwing her weight around, too. Well, he's got enough on his plate without having to trail around after sweet Susi. Especially now that he has a genuine murder case.

At least, that's what Judge Moratschek believes: his beloved goddaughter Letitia certainly didn't fall off a mountain in South Tyrolia all by herself, did she? This is rather Greek to Franz – or rather Italian – and it's not long before he's following the trail of the alleged murder victim in the Dolomites. Meanwhile, sidekick Rudy has the task of investigating the main suspect at a campsite – incognito, of course. Isn't it just swell?!

Warm-hearted and leisurely - the ultimate feel-good novel

In Redu, a small village in the middle of the Belgian Ardennes, time is viewed as a friend, not an opponent: surrounded by unique nature there is only one TV in the village, and the internet is only available between 7 and 8 pm. The church tower is leaning so crookedly, it's in danger of collapsing, but that doesn't seem to bother the 390 inhabitants, any more than hearing its clock tick out of sync. But when - along with spring - a young French-woman named Marie arrives in the village, there is a new lease of life not only for nature, even the dour Mathilde cannot escape the reviving influence ...

Torsten Woywod tells the story of a remarkable friendship and a lovably quirky community, while delivering a declaration of love to the magic of reading and the book trade.

The art of letting go, and the question of what we owe our parents

Güstrow, May 1945: 14-year-old Marlen is hiding, hunched in an old cupboard in an abandoned lodge. As she escapes, she discovers an old, damaged painting. Wilma, a well-known artist, who helped Marlen hide from the approaching Russian soldiers, takes the young orphan in and trains her to be her assistant. And the old painting will become Marlen's artistic workbook and diary.

Berlin, 2023: Hannah Borowski is 34 years old and everything in her life could be quite good, if it wasn't for her best friend suddenly moving out because she's pregnant. And if Hannah's father hadn't suddenly turned up, after many years' absence. And what does all this have to do with the precious painting that once belonged to Hannah's great-grandmother?
